“ Anita, you meant more to me than either of us ever knew. Peace is yours. Fly in the breeze. Play amongst the stars. Visit when it is good for you. Somewhere between here and there we will see each other again.

“ Anita was my best and closest friend growing up; from the time I moved in across the street from her at the age of 5 all the way into our young adulthood. While it is sad to consider how we have drifted apart in our adulthood - especially after ending up geographically so close on the other side of the country from where we met - it is sadder to consider the possibility of never having had the chance to know her at all. She is a large part of who I am today. I am sure in many ways I may never fully understand or appreciate how much so.

When we were teens and young adults we periodically would talk about purpose and destiny. We believed there was a "pull" that influenced our choices and decisions in life but that it was in our will to listen and follow or not. And in our hands to shape the world around us. We believed that our choices, efforts and sacrifices were some of the key things that shaped our spirits and brought us closer to fulfilling that mysterious purpose neither of us truly understood. It is not hard for me to believe that in the end Anita understood and perhaps fulfilled that purpose in this life (she always was better than me in just about everything). And that her early departure from us is a kind of spiritual graduation for her.

While this world is truly a little sadder now without her, it is impossible to imagine or even consider a world where she was never here at all. As with many of you, she will be a part of me until the day I die. My best to her friends and family through the coming days and years. And when the sadness becomes too much think not of regret, but of how truly lucky we were to have shared our road with her for however long.

“ She was my counselor both individual and couples. In a short period of time she helped my partner and I so much... What a joyful soul she had. What a beautiful impact she has made on myself, and I'm sure many others who were blessed to know her. Loving thoughts to her family, friends, and partner. Thank you Anita for everything.
