“Bob was of course utterly brilliant, but even more importantly he was so kind. When I was a new scholar just entering his field, he was invariably encouraging. I remember and try to carry forward that lesson just as much as I do his thoughtful scholarship.

Bob's book Kenneth Burke: Rhetoric, Subjectivity, Postmodernism, is likely the best book written to date on Burke. Due to the breadth of Burke's interests and writings, an adequate assessment of his work is challenging to say the least, but Bob's book presents a remarkable commentary, both laudatory and critical, of Burke's major writings. A wonderful achievement that will be highly regarded for a long time. Bob was a good friend to many in the field of communication and rhetoric and played an active role in several conferences on Burke. He will be greatly missed and long remembered.

Many of us admired Bob's brilliance, and his devotion to up-to-the-minute scholarship (which takes time). He stayed in the game, supported younger faculty, and modeled much that sustains a faculty member's life: wit, incisiveness, constant curiosity. As a former chair of the School of Writing, Literature, and Film, and as a colleague, I remember him fondly and honor his memory.
